Fired for their previous shenanigans, disgraced Vermont Highway Patrol officers Thorny (Jay Chandrasekhar), Farva (Kevin Heffernan), Rabbit (Erik Stolhanske), Foster (Paul Soter) and Mac (Steve Lemme) re-unite when Captain O'Hagan (Brian Cox) and Governor Jessman (Lynda Carter) give the cops a shot at redemption. Their assignment: take over law enforcement in a French-Canadian town transitioning to U.S. sovereignty due to a recently discovered screw-up in border markings.

The Quebec town's ex-hockey player mayor, Guy Le Franc (Rob Lowe), tries to charm the Yankee interlopers at his hockey-themed brothel, while local Canadian Mounties (Will Sasso, Tyler Labine, and Hayes MacArthur) prank the Americans with a little help from a 1,300-pound bear. As they try to overcome their inability to understand the metric system, the Super Troopers eventually uncover a smuggling ring, take revenge on the Mounties and wreak havoc on the good citizens of Canada. Raunchy and outrageous and coming at you this 4/20, SUPER TROOPERS 2 continues in the grand tradition of the Broken Lizard comedy group (SUPER TROOPERS, CLUB DREAD, BEERFEST), serving up R-rated slapstick along with plenty of sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll.

When the Broken Lizard team unleashed SUPER TROOPERS on the public in 2002, the five-man group from Colgate University had no idea its smart and occasionally raunchy stoner comedy would become a cult classic. Filmed on a shoestring budget, the movie played the Sundance Film Festival where it was acquired by Fox Searchlight and went on to bring in $23 million worldwide in its theatrical release. In the years that followed, SUPER TROOPERS gained a devout fan base through DVD and repeat airings on the Comedy Central network.

So why wait 15 years to make a sequel? “We made the decision that if we made another SUPER TROOPERS movie right away, that’s all we’d ever be known for,” explains Broken Lizard resident director Jay Chandrasekhar. “We wanted to make something different. We wanted to make a horror movie.”

But CLUB DREAD, released in 2004, wasn’t what their audience wanted: “The audience didn’t want a horror movie from us,” Chandrasekhar laughs. “They just wanted more of those damn cops running around.”

So about three years ago, Chandrasekhar, Kevin Heffernan, Erik Stolhanske, Paul Soter and Steve Lemme began brainstorming new misadventures for their SUPER TROOPERS characters. The writer-performers were inspired by an NPR radio report about U.S.-Canada border disputes. “We heard on the radio that the government tried to confirm that the stone markers, which delineated the U.S. from Canada, were where they thought they were, and in some cases, there were discrepancies,” Chandrasekhar recalls. “We were amused by this idea: imagine if somebody went back and discovered that the border is not where the border should be? You’ve got all these people who were proudly Canadian who were now being told they have to become American. We felt like that was a fantastic conceit for our film.”

CAPTAIN O’HAGAN RIDES AGAIN

Expanding the fact-based premise to absurd extremes, the Broken Lizard team collectively wrote 37 drafts of SUPER TROOPERS 2, taking pains to cram the script with jokes and sight gags. Then they went to work getting the SUPER TROOPERS gang back together. First call: Brian Cox. Acclaimed for his performances in serious dramas including L.I.E. and Golden Globe®-nominated “Nuremberg,” the British actor also had a memorable role in THE BOURNE IDENTITY and earned plaudits for his title performance in the acclaimed Royal National Theatre production of King Lear.

But for all his achievements, Cox says it’s his performance as world-weary Captain Hagan that has earned him the most recognition from strangers on the street. “About four years after SUPER TROOPERS came out, I was eating in a restaurant in Austin when all these University of Texas students came over to my table and started quoting the film,” Cox says. “Literally, the whole film! I couldn’t remember any of it. But they told me what my lines were, and I said, ‘Well if you say so.’”

Although comedy fans adored SUPER TROOPERS, some critics disagreed, Cox recalls. “When SUPER TROOPERS first came out, I got the worst reviews of my career,” he laughs. “I remember one of them said, ‘If Mr. Cox needed the money, surely someone could’ve lent it to him.’ Despite the critics, I survived it reasonably well and went on to do other things, but at the time, being in SUPER TROOPERS looked like it might be a great impediment to my career.”

Despite that, Cox regards his SUPER TROOPERS character with immense empathy. “The Captain is a sweet, rather sad character because he’s lumbered with these five idiots,” says the actor. “I think the audience should have immense sympathy for my character but instead they just laugh their heads off.”

For their part, the members of Broken Lizard regard Cox with awe. “Brian Cox thinks we’re a bunch of monkeys,” says Lemme. “I mean, he’s done Shakespeare!”

Also returning from the first SUPER TROOPERS are Lynda Carter, iconic star of the 1970s “Wonder Woman” series, and Marisa Coughlan, who reprise their roles as Governor Jessman and Officer Ursula, respectively.

Comedian Jim Gaffigan revisits a fan-favorite 2002 scene that’s come to be known as “The Meow scene.” In the original, Soter’s Trooper Foster stops the car driven by Gaffigan’s character and peppers his interrogation with “Meow.” The nonsensical bit captured viewers’ imaginations. “After all these years, I can’t go anywhere without people saying ‘Meow’ to me,” notes Soter. “It’s such a ridiculous thing to become memorable. We wanted to revisit that idea by having us pull Gaffigan over and he remembers us as the cops who said ‘Meow’ to him years earlier. It’s kind of meta.”

Cox jokes that both he and Gaffigan did their best to elude the long reach of the Broken Lizard group when casting began on the sequel, but the filmmakers ultimately prevailed. “Gaffigan has all these children and he piles them at the door and says ‘Stop these people from coming in,’” laughs Cox. In his own case, the British actor remembers shooting a movie in Siberia when he got the invitation. “There were these sort of Russian secret police who tracked me down and said, ‘These people from SUPER TROOPERS want to make another movie with you.’ I said, ‘Can you just tell them you couldn’t find me?’ But no, they didn’t do that, so the next thing you know, there I was shooting the movie.”

ROB LOWE AS “THE HALIFAX EXPLOSION”

Joining forces with the SUPER TROOPERS creators for the first time is Rob Lowe in the role of smarmy hockey star-turned-politician Guy Le Franc. “We were all fans of the movie YOUNG BLOOD, where Rob played a hockey player,” says Soter. “He’s also been in great comedies like WAYNE’S WORLD and AUSTIN POWERS. In our movies, we like to celebrate the cinematic touchstones of our youth so it was great fun to get people like Rob and Lynda Carter into this one.”

Stolhanske remembers his wife spotting the famously handsome actor when they visited the set. “She said, ‘That guy looks like Rob Lowe.’ I said, ‘That guy is Rob Lowe.’ She couldn’t believe it.” he says.

Lowe, coming off his Emmy®-nominated role on “Parks and Recreation,” came up with the idea of nicknaming his character after a 1917 Canadian maritime disaster called the Halifax Explosion. “I actually brought that idea to Jay because it’s part of this crazy obsession I have with the biggest man-made explosion before the invention of the atom bomb,” Lowe says. “When I told Jay about this disaster, he became fascinated and the Halifax Explosion became sort of a running joke in the movie.”

A FAN-FUNDED EFFORT

Aware of the original film’s dedicated following, Broken Lizard went directly to its fanbase to finance SUPER TROOPERS 2’s production budget. A campaign on the Indiegogo site raised more than $4.6 million donated directly by SUPER TROOPERS devotees eager to see more hijinks. The campaign went on to become the second most successful crowdfunding campaign for a movie ever. “When we did the crowdfunding thing, we didn’t know how it would pan out,” Heffernan says. “It could have been very embarrassing, but luckily the fans came out.”

Adds Soter: “It pushed us into the reality of ‘We’re really making a movie now.’ And of course, you want to make the movie great for the fans because they helped finance it for us.”

As a reward for supporting the movie, four generous Indiegogo backers, Matt Swan, Kim Lovett, Jyoti Patel and Kevin Birtcher were invited to visit the Super Troopers 2 set. “I really enjoyed the first SUPER TROOPERS and a lot of my friends did too,” says Patel. “Getting the chance to actively give money so they could go make another one seemed like really good idea and it was really exciting to feel like you’re a part of something you really love.”

Lemme says the show of support from SUPER TROOPERS 2 online backers meant a lot both emotionally and financially. “It’s really humbling to meet these fans face to face and tell them, ‘You contributed the first money to the budget of our movie and that really unlocked everything else.’”

BAITING THE BEAR

While SUPER TROOPERS featured a fake bear sequence, for the sequel the filmmakers upped the ante by hiring an actual 1,300-pound bear named Whopper to terrorize Heffernan’s character, Farva. “The bear was a real diva,” jokes Lemme. In SUPER TROOPERS 2, the pivotal man-versus-bear scene centers on Farva as he tries to distract the hungry animal ransacking police headquarters in search of food.

“There was a great moment the other day, when I worked with the proper sort of actor, who happened to be a bear who hit his marks,” says Brian Cox. “The bear did what he was told, and was excellent. And we filmed it quicker than any other scene. This bear came in, did this stuff, got out, he was fantastic.”

“The bear was a good actor. He hit his mark every time, did it on the first take and then it went back to its trailer,” Heffernan recalls.

“He works for meat,” added Jay Chandrasekhar.

STRONG ACCENTS AND NAKED MOUNTIES

The reinstated Vermont State Highway officers in SUPER TROOPERS 2 harbor contempt for all things Canadian, but if their accents are any indication, the three actors co-starring as Canadian Mounties also display casual disregard for authentic north-of-the-border culture. “My Canadian accent is on a sliding scale, different from scene to scene,” Hayes MacArthur says. “I’ll get the Scottish brogue coming in at times.” And Labine notes, “Sometimes a little Russian sneaks in there.”

Will Sasso, the burly star of the Emmy-nominated “MADtv” series, grew up in Canada and a strong French-Canadian dialect. “My accent was so thick and gravelly, you could roast marshmallows on it,” he says. “I had to smoke cigars in the morning and inhale and walk around the lobby of our hotel just to warm up.”

Sasso, MacArthur, and Labine vividly remember the arduous night sequence when their Mountie characters are humiliated by the Americans. “The second day of the shoot we got dropped off naked in the woods wearing nothing but red, white and blue body paint,” MacArthur recalls.

Adds Labine: “The funny thing about full body paint is that you can’t really sit down once they’ve painted your rear, and you can’t wear a robe ’cause the paint will rub off. So, there was a lot of time where we’re just hanging out getting bit by random bugs. And we were literally leaving abstract art everywhere we went. You’d sit down and when you got up, it looked like a Jackson Pollock painting on the chair.”

CONTRIVED CHAOS

Filmed in Massachusetts in August and September 2016 with cinematographer Joe Collins behind the camera, SUPER TROOPERS 2 challenged cast members to bring their slapstick A-games. “I can only describe the mood as contrived chaos,” Cox says. “You learn to ride with it.”

For his role as Foster, Soter says it was all about getting laughs. “I mugged. I said silly things. I did physical comedy. For me, there was not a single ounce of heavy lifting or romantic purpose at all. Erik got it the best and the worst in this movie. He gets the love scenes, and he also got chained to a giant industrial saw.”

While each Broken Lizard suffers for his art in SUPER TROOPERS 2, Heffernan’s Farva had a particularly rough time of it. “I was the biggest jackass in the first movie, where I had all kind of gunk dropped on me,” Heffernan says. “Now for this one, it’s even more: I end up in a porta-potty that flips over and blue goop pours all over me.”

Stolhanske’s character, Rabbit, falls victim to a shaving-cream locker-room scene. The Mounties tell the Americans about a hazing ritual that involves the rookie of the bunch getting handcuffed to a bench and forcibly shaved.

Then there was the sequence that marked a first for Lemme. “Not only did I do acid in this movie, I also did a full-frontal and rear nude scene at the same time,” says the actor, who reportedly underwent rigorous preparation for his nude scene. “We like to call that the Django scene,” jokes Heffernan.

“Steve’s goal was to have a dimple on the side of his butt,” Heffernan observes. “For two months, you’d see Steve doing leg lifts all the time.”

Lemme elaborates: “You have to get the buttocks prepared and get yourself in shape and practice cartwheels.” As soon as the scene was completed, Lemme gorged on snacks. “We found Steve at one of the craft service tables just eating, eating, eating,” Heffernan says. “He was gobbling candy,” Chandrasekhar adds. Lemme confirms: “It was decadent. I owned it.”

The film shot in Massachusetts locations including Concord, Southborough, Hopkinton, Marlborough and the Quabbin Reservoir. One interior served as both police station and brothel, recalls production designer Cabot McMullen (“Scrubs,” “Supergirl”). “What started out as a dual-sex strip club in our movie somehow morphed into a hockey-themed bordello that we pretend exists in Canada,” Soter says. “Maybe it does. I don’t know.”

Between the Mounties’ bare-naked debacle, the bordello showdown and the shaving sequence, SUPER TROOPERS 2 shows plenty of skin. “There’s more nudity, both female and male, than we’ve ever had in any of our other movies,” says Stolhanske “We like to give something back to the ladies.”

SUPER TROOPERS RIDE AGAIN

For comedy fans who appreciate goofball antics in the tradition of ANIMAL HOUSE and CADDYSHACK, the anarchy-packed SUPER TROOPERS 2 serves up a fresh helping of Broken Lizard’s trademark R-rated wackiness. While SUPER TROOPERS has become a cult comedy classic, this one stands on its own but has some definite throwbacks to the original. “It’s been fun for us to play the Super Troopers again because we don’t really have to discover our characters,” says Chandrasekhar: “We just painted them a little weirder and tried to make as good a movie as we could. Whether it catches on in the same way as the first one, who the hell knows? All I know is that we wrote what we think is a very funny movie and we shot it.”

As for Cox, the veteran thespian says he’s already looking forward to his fantasy of what a SUPER TROOPERS 3 might look like. “I’ve played King Lear and I’ve played Titus Andronicus,” Cox says. “I’ve done all these major roles up the wazoo, but I always wanted to be Jerry Lewis because, you see, I’m a closet comedian. Hopefully, if there’s a SUPER TROOPERS 3 Captain O’Hagan will be able to exact his revenge. That’s what I’m looking forward to: No night shoots...and exacting my revenge.”

Further strengthening her relationship with writer/producer Kevin Williamson, Coughlan led the cast of ABC/Miramax's WASTELAND. She portrayed Dawnie, a charming, virginal, and somewhat neurotic twenty-something who converges with five of her former college friends several years after graduation.

While still in high school herself, Coughlan garnered a featured role in director Tony Bill's romantic drama, UNTAMED HEART for MGM. Hayes has also worked extensively as a writer developing projects for CBS, FOX, Amazon Studios and DreamWorks.

WILL SASSO (MOUNTIE ARCHAMBAULT) recently reunited with director Peter Farrelly in the role of 'Ben,' opposite Ron Livingston on the series "Loudermilk" from AT&T's flagship Audience Network. He first worked with the Farrelly Brothers as 'Curly' on The 20th Century Fox feature, THE THREE STOOGES, alongside Sean Hayes as 'Larry' and Chris Diamantopoulos as 'Moe.' Sasso will soon be seen in the Jake Scott thriller THE BURNING WOMAN joining Christina Hendricks, Aaron Paul, Sienna Miller and Jacki Weaver. He starred in Amazon's pot comedy, "Budding Prospects," as well as recurred on Comedy Central's "Another Period," ABC's "Kevin Probably Saves the World," with further recent credits include the films, HIT BY LIGHTNING, opposite Jon Cryer and ARMY OF ONE, starring Nicolas Cage and directed by Larry Charles, appeared opposite Larry David in the new season of "Curb Your Enthusiasm,” as well as Showtimes’s hit series, “Shameless” and ABC’s “Modern Family,” and NBC’s “Great News.” Sasso’s affinity for comedy was inspired from a young age by such iconic television shows as “SCTV,” “Saturday Night Live,” and “Monty Python’s Flying Circus,” along with a heavy dose of “The Kids in the Hall” through his adolescent years. Growing up in Ladner BC, a suburb of Vancouver, he booked roles in television and film as a teenager, making his small screen debut on the CTV series “Neon Rider.” While still in his teens, Sasso starred as the quirky ‘Derek Wakaluk’ on the award---winning Canadian dramatic series, “Madison,” and soon landed big screen roles in HAPPY GILMORE and BEVERLY HILLS NINJA, starring Chris Farley. Eventually, Sasso moved to Los Angeles where he would ultimately join FOX’s sketch comedy series, “MADtv,” where he starred for five seasons. Sasso enjoys taking part in social media across various apps on the internet. He also has a podcast as well as a YouTube Channel because that’s in a bio and you just read it.

ROB LOWE (GUY LEFRANC) has become one of Hollywood’s most highly acclaimed triple threats – as an actor, author and producer. Born in Charlottesville, Virginia and raised in Dayton, Ohio, Lowe began his acting career in local television and theater at the age of eight. After his family relocated to Los Angeles, Lowe began his national acting career starring in the ABC television series, “A New Kind of Family.” Today, Lowe’s charismatic talent and palpable success have radiated far beyond the realm of television.

Lowe recently wrapped production on the third season of the CBS medical drama “Code Black” where he plays Col. Ethan Willis, a doctor in the U.S. military’s prestigious combat casualty care research program. This past summer he appeared on the A&E unscripted series “The Lowe Files,” the nine-episode series follows Lowe and his two sons, Matthew and John Owen, as they travel the country exploring infamous unsolved mysteries. Last April he starred alongside Eugenio Derbez in the hit comedy “How to be a Latin Lover.” He is currently starring in and directing a remake of the 4-time academy award nominated film, THE BAD SEED.

He rose to fame with in 1983, with starring roles in movies such as THE OUTSIDERS, OXFORD BLUES, ABOUT LAST NIGHT, BAD INFLUENCE, ST. ELMO'S FIRE, WAYNE'S WORLD, TOMMY BOY, and AUSTIN POWERS: THE SPY WHO SHAGGED ME.

From 1999 – 2003, Lowe starred as Sam Seaborn on hit NBC drama “The West Wing.” His performance in the show garnered him an Emmy nomination for Outstanding Lead Actor in a Drama series, as well as two Golden Globe nominations for Best Performance by an Actor in a Television Series. The West Wing cast was nominated three times by the Screen Actors Guild for an Outstanding Performance by an Ensemble in a Drama Series award, and won twice. In 2016, Lowe received a Best Actor Golden Globe nomination for FOX’s, “The Grinder.”

In May 2010, Rob Lowe joined the cast of NBC's "Parks and Recreation," after previously starring in the ABC-TV hit series, "Brothers & Sisters" from 2007 – 2010. In 2009, Lowe also starred opposite Ricky Gervais, Jennifer Garner, and Tina Fey in Warner Bros', THE INVENTION OF LYING.

He released his memoir, Stories I Only Tell my Friends in 2011. The book was an instant hit, spending consecutive weeks in the top four of The New York Times best sellers and making it onto GQ's "Best of 2011" book list. Lowe's second book, Love Life was published in 2014 and also landed a spot on the NY Times Best-Seller list. Following the success of his books he completed a limited- run tour of Stories I Only Tell My Friends: LIVE! this past fall.

Lowe also received critical acclaim and a leading actor nomination from the Screen Actors Guild for his starring role in National Geographic Channel's, "Killing Kennedy," which also garnered an Emmy nomination in November 2013. Lowe received a Golden Globe nomination for his co-starring role in the 15- time Emmy nominated HBO film "Behind the Candelabra," playing the role of Dr. Jack Startz. The film was directed by Steven Soderbergh and produced by Jerry Weintraub.

Lowe's legacy in Hollywood was cemented in 2015 with the unveiling of his Walk of Fame star.

JOE COLLINS (DIRECTOR OF PHOTOGRAPHY) is based out of Brooklyn, NY. He graduated from the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunication at Arizona State University with a BS in Broadcasting in 1987. After graduating, he spent 2 years working as a camera technician at General Camera in NY, and 1990 he joined Local 644, now the International Cinematographers Guild.

Joe worked his way up the camera ranks in NY, starting as a 2nd Assistant Cameraman working on such films as GLENGARRY GLEN ROSS, CARLITO’S WAY, FORREST GUMP, and A BRONX TALE. As a 1st Assistant Cameraman in the mid to late ’90’s, Joe pulled focus on MEET JOE BLACK, PRIVATE PARTS, and John Singleton’s remake of SHAFT, among others.

But it was six seasons on HBO's groundbreaking "Sex and the City" where it all came together and new careers were launched. Joe began as a Steadicam focus puller season 1, and was the A camera operator by season 6. It was a once in a lifetime gig, long hours but a ton of laughs.

Once he began operating, Joe split his time between features and television, and some of his credits here include PS I LOVE YOU, 27 DRESSES, "Ugly Betty," SEX AND THE CITY-THE MOVIE, and MICHAEL CLAYTON. He worked for renowned DP's Robert Elswit, Seamus McGarvey, Alik Sakharov, and Terry Stacey. Always with an eye on shooting, Joe took advantage of his opportunities, shooting the Additional Photography/2nd Unit for "Sex and the City" and for MICHAEL CLAYTON then took over the DP duties on "Ugly Betty" for its final season in 2009, and he has been shooting ever since.

Television has provided the majority of Joe's work for the last decade, with series on NBC, ABC, CBS, HBO, Showtime, Amazon, AMC, and USA, and he has established a reputation for being a quick, creative, and collaborative artist. He's also an active episodic director, having joined the DGA in 2013. Joe's most recent projects are "Instinct" for CBS and "Divorce" for HBO.

A native of Boston Mass., CABOT MCMULLEN (PRODUCTION DESIGNER) started his career in New York City working for renowned furniture designer Vladimir Kagan. That led to years of designing sets on the New York Stage – on and off Broadway, where he learned the craft and paid his dues. Cabot's first big break was art directing "Saturday Night Live" season 10. Gary David Goldberg and Michael J. Fox next tapped him to design the political comedy series "Spin City" for Dreamworks / ABC. Cabot followed show runner Bill Lawrence to LA to design his new comedy series "Scrubs" – a launch pad for the next generation of rising directors and writers, many of whom are running the TV business today.

As Production Designer and Entrepreneur Cabot has helped launch new entertainment brands across multiple platforms for production companies, ad agencies, record labels, television networks and the major film studios. Classically trained with degrees in Fine Arts and Architecture Cabot takes a multidisciplinary approach to design, the range and skill set he brings to film work is extensive. He has been nominated for three Emmy Awards and three Art Director's Guild Awards.

Since 2001 Cabot has designed fourteen feature films all over the country. Recent credits include the new sequel to director Jay Chandrasekhar's cult comedy SUPER TROOPERS, Kevin Smith's YOGA HOSERS starring Johnny Depp and RED STATE starring John Goodman, "Picture Paris" for HBO films with Julia Louis Dreyfus, director James Mottern's TRUCKER starring Michelle Monaghan and director David Mackenzie's SPREAD script by Jason Hall.

Recent Television credits include the pilot and first season of DC Comics' workplace comedy "Powerless" on NBC, also the Mark Gordon Company's "Designated Survivor" pilot for ABC starring Kiefer Sutherland in Toronto, the “Supergirl” pilot for Warner Bros. by Greg Berlanti for CBS starring Mellisa Benoist and Callista Flockhart. For EP Steven Spielberg...the futuristic drama pilot “Extant” starring Halle Berry, also his NBC musical drama series “SMASH” and cable series “The United States of Tara” starring Toni Collette by Diablo Cody on Showtime (ADG nomination). Also, the comedies “Hello Ladies” for HBO by Stephen Merchant, “Cougartown” starring Courteney Cox, “Trophy Wife” for ABC starring Malin Akerman, Bradley Whitford and Marcia Gay Harden for ABC and “The New Adventures of Old Christine” starring Julia Louis Dreyfus for CBS (multiple Emmy &ADG nominations).

After graduating from Ohio University with a degree in video production and a passion for film, SPENCER HOUCK (EDITOR) moved to Los Angeles to pursue a career in film and television editing. Since then, he's edited on several acclaimed series, including NBC's comedy darling “Community,” Netflix's Emmy-winning “Grace and Frankie,” and the Hank Azaria starring IFC series “Brockmire.” Houck has also edited various pilots for TBS and TruTV, working closely with the directors in creating the look and feel of the shows.

Before all that, Houck had the pleasure of starting his career at Mark Woollen & Associates, the premiere motion picture advertising company responsible for creating memorable trailer and TV campaigns for films such as THE SOCIAL NETWORK, and SLUMDOG MILLIONAIRE.

Spencer couldn't be prouder of SUPER TROOPERS 2 - his first big feature film. He credits it for opening an exciting new chapter of his career, as well as inspiring his mom's newly found interest in medical marijuana.

Among DEBRA MCGUIRE's (COSTUME DESIGNER) many accomplishments as a fine artist, fashion designer and costume designer, she has been best known for her 10-year run on the hit show “Friends” and for designing many of David Mamet's film and theatre projects including “Phil Spector” (starring Al Pacino and Helen Mirren), nominated for 11 Emmy's and in which she was nominated for Best Costume Design. Debra has also designed many of Judd Apatow and Jake Kasdan's film and television projects. She has just wrapped on two consecutive films, “Game Night” and “I Feel Pretty” and is currently finishing the 7th and final season of “The New Girl”.

Passionate about the theater, she began designing costumes for a dance theatre company in Paris in the early 80's. In 2007, she won the NAACP Award for Best Costume Design for Atlanta, at the Geffen Playhouse and in 2006 she was nominated for an Ovation Award for Best Costume Design for Boston Marriage, at the Geffen Playhouse. Summer 2016 she designed the original period musical, I Only Have Eyes for You (written by Arlene Sarner and Jerry Leichling, Directed by Kay Cole), at the Montalban Theatre in Los Angeles, which has been nominated for several Ovation awards.

Debra is primarily a fine artist with a career that began as a painter, working and teaching in her Bay Area studio. She became an instructor at Colleges and Universities in Northern California, a Jewelry and Accessories Designer in New York, Fashion Designer, Fashion Consultant, Couturier (with a store in Pacific Palisades, Ca. for 10 years) and Costume Designer. She has been speaking at Galleries and Art Colleges on the East Coast, most recently Pratt Institute, RI School of Design and Brown University: The Refinement of Process: Visual Journey of the Artist as Costume Designer. Recently back in the studio, she travels between her LA loft/studio and her Rhode Island home/studio.
